

Brittney Majka

brittney.majka@gmail.com

Washington, D.C.

"If everything is important, then nothing is."

Driven by her values of learning and serving, Brittney specializes in empowering others to discover their values and live fully and confidently from these priorities. As a mom to three young children, she recognizes the inherent messiness of life and the intentional focus it takes to find progress and productivity in the face of life's many distractions. She is a firm believer that learning leadership is a life-changing opportunity and when exhibited by parents, it will change the world one generation at a time.

Brittney has more than 15 years of experience with The Leadership Challenge as a teacher, facilitator, and coach. She has expertise with the Leadership Practices Inventory (LPI) tool and enjoys training coaches on how to most effectively debrief and coach leaders on their feedback.

Brittney has an extensive background in leadership development and generational research. She received her Bachelor's of Science degree in Communication and Leadership Development from the University of Florida (Go Gators!) and her Master's of Arts degree in Organizational Leadership from the University of Maryland. Her research was highlighted in an article called, Millennial Myth-busting: A quest to understand what millennials really think about leadership.

Brittney lives in the Washington, D.C metro area and has been married to her husband Nick for more than 10 years. They have three young children; Callie, Ian, and Tessa. Her hobbies include baking too many cupcakes, playing board games, and cheering on the Gators during college football season!

